We support the year-long National History Day academic program at our locations around the country and online! The National Archives is the nation's record keeper. We hold billions of primary sources. Many can be incorporated into NHD research and projects.

Student and Teacher Workshops

We offer National History Day help and training at our DC, regional, and Presidential Library locations, as well as online through our distance learning programs.

Online Research Tools

Students can find primary sources for National History Day projects by searching through the digitized holdings of the National Archives while exploring specific topics.

In-Person Research Information

Students can visit one of our DC, regional, or Presidential Library locations to do in-person research in the holdings of the National Archives.

Choose teaching activities to get your students thinking about this year's National History Day theme. Share primary sources for possible NHD topics with them or lead them to explore for themselves!
